

From the PRINCIPAL'S DESK

Albert Einstein is known to have said, "Only a life lived for others is a life worthwhile". These words could not have resonated with the youngsters at a more opportune time, than now, when we had our High school students engage in the SEWA activity, where they visited an Old Age Home, Shabari Ashraya, run by an NGO.

The experience was an eye opener for many, who on returning were wiser for the experience and grateful for the countless blessings they enjoy, which up until now, they had taken for granted. To be of assistance to someone other than yourself. To add joy in the life of others can bring such contentment came as a whiff of satisfaction to the students who are so self-absorbed in their lives, that they hardly have the time or the inclination to look at the world around. But these few precious moments spent in the midst of the aged and the forgotten caregivers, surely changed their perspective of life. One afternoon taught them that, everyone can be great, because everyone can serve!
